

Hunting and gathering

Kangaroo Island food experiences don't get much closer to the ground than Nick Hannaford's latest venture at beautiful Snellings Beach.

Hidden away on the island's north coast, Nick has already established a go-to destination with his LifeTime Private Retreats – three luxury beach villas, each set on its own private estate.

Now he's added 'shearing shed' dinners, which he hosts in his family's beautifully rustic 1800s shearing shed. He's a meticulous host and a seriously good chef.

On the night Sumptuous visits, the shed – with its twisted gum posts, chandeliers, and bohemian-eclectic-rustic-décor – is filled with ebullient visitors as Nick serves up an appetiser of sand crab and vanilla; an entrée of tommy ruff, Island feta, pickled samphire and grilled vegetables; and a slow-cooked lamb shoulder with baked gnocchi and tomato and ginger sauce. We finish with walnut meringue, passionfruit and figs from the property. It's all perfectly cooked, clever and honest food.

The shearing shed dinner is an exclusive, bookings-only experience, which is also an inclusion in Nick's latest gastronomic creation – the Field to Feast Retreat.

Guests at the Field to Feast Retreat not only stay in one of the Hannaford's luxury retreats, they also have the unique experience of helping to gather their own food, which Nick whips up into delicious meals.

On day one, Nick will meet you at Kingscote Airport and take you to some of the island's best producers, including the KI Abalone farm, which is not open to the general public.

On to the retreats, where you will sample local food at a 'soiree' at LifeTime's 'Cliff House'.

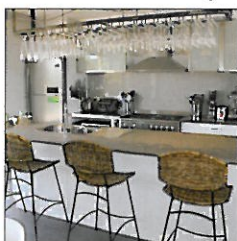

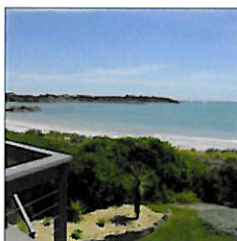

The next day, a morning stroll along the beach for some 'shopping' might yield periwinkles or samphire, before a seafood BBQ lunch.

A candle-lit dinner in the shearing shed caps off your adventure.
